Diwali

Diwali is the Indian Festival of Light. It is held in late October or early November and celebrates the beginning of the Indian new year. The celebrations last for five days.

At last Diwali has arrived. Alisha makes a chart to mark off the days.

On the first day of the festival, Alisha and her dad make a rangoli pattern. They decorate it with coloured powder. Alisha puts the rangoli pattern by the front door to welcome visitors.

Then she helps her mum to make a sweet called barfi for their family and friends.

On the second day, Alisha goes to Indian school.
The teacher tells the children a Diwali story about a prince called Ram and his wife, Sita.

Alisha's favourite part is when Ram rescues Sita
from Ravan, the evil king.

In the story, the people welcome Ram and Sita
by lighting lamps called diya.

The third day of the festival is called Diwali.
After breakfast, Alisha makes a card for her family. On the front, she draws a diya and writes “Happy Diwali”.

In the evening, Alisha watches her mum light diyas to put around their home.
The lights flicker in the darkness.

After dinner, everyone goes outside to light fireworks.

The fourth day is New Year's Day.
In the afternoon, Alisha visits Grandma.
Grandma is wearing a brand new sari.
“Saal Mubarak,”^{*} says Alisha,
and she gives Grandma some barfi.

 Saal Mubarak means Happy New Year.

At night, Alisha and her friends will be performing a dance at a concert. Alisha tries on her beautiful new dress that Grandma has brought her from India.

At the hall, there is a colourful rangoli pattern to welcome everyone to the show.

When Alisha and her friends dance onto the stage, their dresses sparkle under the bright lights. The girls perform the dance perfectly, and everyone claps and cheers.

The last day of the Diwali festival is Bhai Beej. It's a special day for brothers and sisters. Alisha makes afternoon tea for her brother, Sajan. After they have eaten, Sajan gives Alisha a present.

The next day, Alisha takes down her chart.
The five days of Diwali are over,
and the new year has begun.
